

Guidelines for Contributors to MLR

The Modern Language Review welcomes articles on any aspect of modern and medieval European (including English and Latin American) languages, literatures, and cultures (including cinema). We encourage submissions from postgraduates. Two typescript copies of articles should be submitted to the appropriate section editor. Articles should conform precisely to the conventions of the MHRA Style Guide, 2002 (ISBN 0-947623-62-0), obtainable from Maney Publishing, Hudson Road, Leeds LS9 7DL, price, including postage, £5.00 (overseas £6.00, US $12.00) payable in advance (an online version of the Guide is also available at <http://www.mhra.org.uk/Publications/Books/StyleGuide/download.shtml>). Authors should provide an abstract of their articles with keywords highlighted. This abstract should not exceed 100 words. At the end of articles and reviews contributors should include, in this order, their affiliation or location; name as it is to be printed; name and postal address for correspondence; and e-mail address. Simple references should be incorporated into the text (see MHRA Style Guide, p. 39). Further guidance on the preparation of articles on disk can be obtained from the Editor on request. Double spacing should be used throughout, including quotations and footnotes, which should be in the same large size of type as the rest of the article. Articles do not normally exceed 8,000 words. Quotations and references should be carefully checked. The Modern Language Review regrets that it must charge contributors for the cost of corrections in a proof which the Editor in his or her discretion thinks excessive. Contributors should keep a copy of their typescript. Typescripts not accepted for publication will not normally be returned. If your article is accepted, you will be asked to supply a definitive version of it in both hard copy and on diskette or as an e-mail attachment. Authors should ensure that there is no discrepancy between the computer file and the printout.

It is a condition of publication in this journal that authors of articles and reviews assign copyright, including electronic copyright, to the MHRA. Inter alia, this allows the General Editor to deal efficiently and consistently with requests from third parties for permission to reproduce material. The journal has been published simultaneously in printed and electronic form since January 2001. Permission, without fee, for authors to use their own material in other publications, after a reasonable period of time has elapsed, is not normally withheld.

Contributors will receive twenty copies of articles and ten of reviews free. Additional copies of articles, if desired, may be had at cost price and should be ordered when the first proof is returned.
