

The Yearbook of English Studies

Two typescript copies of articles should be submitted to the Editor along with an electronic copy sent by e-mail. Authors should ensure that there is no discrepancy between the computer file and the printout. Articles should conform precisely to the conventions of the MHRA Style Guide, Second Edition, 2008 (ISBN 978-0-947623-76-0), obtainable from www.style.mhra.org.uk, price, £6.00, US $15; an online version of the Guide is also available from the same address. Authors should provide an abstract of their articles with keywords highlighted. This abstract should not exceed 100 words. At the end of articles and reviews contributors should include, in this order, their affiliation or location; name as it is to be printed; name and postal address for correspondence; and e-mail address. Simple references should be incorporated into the text (see MHRA Style Guide, Second Edition, Chapter 11.) Double spacing should be used throughout, particularly in quotations and in footnotes, which should be in the same large size of type as the rest of the article. Articles do not normally exceed 8,000 words. Quotations and references should be carefully checked. The Yearbook regrets that it must charge contributors for the cost of corrections in proof which the Editor in his or her discretion thinks excessive. Contributors should keep a copy of their typescript. Typescripts not accepted for publication will normally be returned by surface mail.

It is a condition of publication in this journal that the authors assign copyright, including electronic copyright, to the MHRA. Inter alia, this allows the Editor to deal efficiently and consistently with requests from third parties for permission to reproduce material. The journal is being published simultaneously in printed and electronic form from January 2001. Permission, without fee, for authors to use their own material in other publications, after a reasonable period of time has elapsed, is not normally withheld.

Articles and books for review should be sent to:

On publication of each issue of the journal authors will receive, by email, the finalized PDF of their contribution as it appears in the printed volume. Physical offprints are not supplied. Authors of articles will also receive a complimentary copy of the printed issue in which the article appears.
